JOHN DWIGHT & CO'S

SODA SALÆRATUS

MAY be found at the Sugar Warehouse of Goodrich & Hunter, No. 42 East water-st.

The attention of the public is called to this article as being superior to Pearlash Saleratus in its effect—giving cookery a more delicate appearance and flavor; and also as more wholesome—Soda being more congenial to the human system than Potash. It is more economical than Pearl'sh Saleratus—less quantity being required to produce the same effect. The article is put up in pound papers with full directions for use.

Also may be found, John Dwight & Co.'s

Washing & Cleansing Powders,

which will be found, on trial, a very superior article, saving much labor of washing Clothes, &c. It will soften hard water. To Engineers and Machinists it is invaluable for removing grease from Machinery and other iron works leaving the iron perfectly dry, and not liable to rust.

Directions for use are printed on each package.

BLEAK HOUSE.

BY

CHARLES DICKENS.

CHAPTER IV.—QUITE AT HOME

The day had brightened very much, and still brightened as we went westward. We went our way through the sunshine and the fresh air, wondering more and more at the extent of the streets, the brilliancy of the shops, the great traffic, and the crowds of people whom the pleasanter weather seemed to have brought out like many-colored flowers. By-and-by, we began to leave the wonderful city, and to proceed through suburbs which, of themselves, would have made a pretty large town, in my eyes; and at last we got into a real country road again with windmills, rick-yards, milestones, farmers' wagons, scents of old hay, swinging sings, and horse-troughs: trees, fields, and hedgerows. It was delightful to see the green land-scape before us, and the immense metropolis behind; and when a wagon with a train of beautiful horses, furnished with red trappings and clear-sounding bells, came by us with its music, I believe we could all three have sung to the bells, so cheerful were the influences around.

"The whole road has been reminding me of my namesake, Whittington," said Richard, "and that wagon is the finishing touch. Hallon! what's the matter!"

We had stopped, and the wagon had stopped, too. Its music changed as the horses came to a stand, and subsided to a gentle tinkling, except when a horse tossed his head, or shook himself, and sprinkled off a little shower of bell-ringing.

"Our postillion is looking after the wagoner," said Richard, "and the wagoner is coming back after us. Good-day, friend!" The wagoner was at our coach-door. "Why, here's an extraordinary thing!" added Richard, looking closely at the man. "He has got your name, Ada, in his hat!"

He had all our names in his hat. Tucked within the band, were three small notes; one, addressed to Ada, one to Richard; one to me.—These the wagoner delivered to each of us respectively, reading the name aloud first. In answer to Richard's inquiry from whom they came, he briefly answered, "Master, sir; if you please;" and, putting on his hat again (which was a soft bowl), cracked his whip, re-awakened his music, and went melodiously away.

"Is that Mr. Jarndyce's wagon?" said Richard, calling to our post boy.

"Yes, sir," he replied. "Going to London."

We opened the notes. Each was a counterpart of the other, and contained these words, in a solid, plain hand:

"I look forward, my dear, to our meeting easily and without constraint on either side. I therefore have to propose that we meet as old friends, and take the past for granted. It will be a relief to you possibly, and to me certainly, and so my love to you. JOHN JARNDYCE."

I had, perhaps, less reason to be surprised than either of my companions, having never yet enjoyed an opportunity of thanking one who had been my benefactor and sole earthly dependence tho' so many years. I had not considered how I could thank him, my gratitude lying too deep in my heart for that; but I now began to consider how I could meet him without thanking him, and felt it would be very difficult indeed.

The notes received, in Richard and Ada, a general impression that they both had, without quite knowing how they came by it, that their cousin, Jarndyce, could never bear acknowledgments for any kindness he performed, and that, sooner than receive any, he would resort to the most singular expedients and evasions, or would even run away. Ada dimly remembered to have heard her mother tell, when she was a very little child, that he had once done her an act of uncommon generosity, and that on her going to his house to thank him he had escaped to see her through a window coming to the door, and immediately escaped by the back gate, and was not heard of for three months. This discomforted to a great deal more on the same theme, and indeed it lasted us all day, and we talked of scarcely any thing else. If we did, by any chance, diverge into another subject, we soon returned to this; and wondered what the house would be like, and when we should get there, and whether we should see Mr. Jarndyce as soon as we arrived, or after a delay, and what he would say to us, and what we should say to him. All of which we wondered about, over and overagain.

The roads were very heavy for the horses, but the pathway was generally good; so we alighted and walked up all the hills, and liked it so well that we prolonged our walk on the level ground when we got to the top. At Barnet there were other horses waiting for us; but as they had only just been fed, we had to wait for them, too, and got a long fresh walk, over a common and an old battle-field, before the carriage came up. These delays, so protracted the journey that the short day was spent, and the long night had closed in before we came to Saint Albans, near to which town Bleak House was, we knew.

By that time we were so anxious and nervous that even Richard confessed, as we rattled over the stones of the old street, to feeling an irrational desire to drive back again. As to Ada and me, whom he had wrapped up with great care, the night being sharp and frosty, we trembled from head to foot. When we turned out of the town, round a corner, and Richard told us that the post-boy, who had for a long time sympathized with our heightened expectation, was looking back and nodding, we both stood up in the carriage (Richard holding Ada, lest she should be jolted down,) and gazed round upon the open country and the star-light night, for our destination. There was a light sparkling on the top of a hill before us, and the driver, pointing to it with his whip and crying, "That's Bleak House!" put his horses into a canter, and took us forward at such a rate, up-hill though it was, that the wheels sent the road-drift flying about our heads like spray from a water-mill. Presently we lost the light, presently saw it, presently lost it, presently saw it, and turned into an avenue of trees, and cantered up toward where it was beaming brightly. It was in a window of what seemed to be an old-fashioned house, with three peaks to the roof in front, and a circular sweep leading to the porch. A bell was rung as we drew up, and amidst the sound of its deep voice in the still air, and the distant barking of some dogs, and a gush of light from the opened door, and the smoking and steaming of the heated horses, and the quickened beating of our own hearts, we alighted in no inconsiderable confusion.

"Ada, my dear Esther, my dear, you are welcome. A voice to see you! Rick, if I had a hand to spare at present, I would give it you."

The gentleman who said these words in a clear, bright, hospitable voice, had one of his arms round Ada's waist, and the other round mine, and kissed us both in a fatherly way, and bore us across the hall into a ruddy little room, all lined in a glow with a blazing fire. Here he kissed us again, and, opening his arms, made us sit down side-by-side, on a sofa ready drawn out near the hearth. I felt that if we had been at all demonstrative, he would have run away in a moment.

"Now, Rick," said he, "I have a hand at liberty. A word in earnest is as good as a speech. I am heartily glad to see you. You are at home.—Warm yourself!"

Richard shook him by both hands with an intuitive mixture of respect and frankness, and saying (though with an earnestness that rather alarmed me, I was so afraid of Mr. Jarndyce's suddenly disappearing), "You are very kind, sir! We are very much obliged to you!" laid aside his hat and coat, and came up to the fire.

"And how did you like the ride? And how did you like Mrs. Jellyby, my dear?" said Mr. Jarndyce to Ada.

While Ada was speaking to him in reply, I glanced (I need not say with how much interest) at his face. It was a handsome, lively, quick face, full of change and motion; and his hair was a silvered iron-gray. I took him to be nearer sixty than fifty, but he was upright, hearty, and robust. From the moment of his first speaking to us, his voice had connected it self with an association in my mind that I could not define; but now, all at once, a some thing sudden in his manner and pleasant expression in his eyes, recalled the gentleman in the stage-coach, six years ago, on the memorable day of my journey to Reading. I was certain it was he. I never was so frightened in my life as when I made the discovery, for he caught my glance, and appearing to read my thoughts, gave such a look at the door that I thought we had lost him.

However, I am happy to say he remained where he was, and asked me what I thought of Mrs. Jellyby.

"She exerts herself very much for Africa, sir," I said.

"Nobly!" returned Mr. Jarndyce. "But you cannot like Ada," whom I had not heard. "You all think something else, I see."

"We rather thought," said I, glancing at Richard and Ada, who entreated me with their eyes to speak, "that perhaps she was a little unmindful of her home."

"Floored!" cried Mr. Jarndyce.

I was rather alarmed again.

"Well! I want to know your real thoughts, my dear. I may have sent you there on purpose."

"We thought that, perhaps," said I hesitating, "it is right to begin with the obligations of home, sir: and that, perhaps, while those are overlooked and neglected, no other duties can possibly be substituted for them?"

"The little Jellybys," said Richard, coming to my relief, "are really—I can't help expressing myself strongly, sir—in a dreadful state."

"She means well," said Mr. Jarndyce, hastily. "The wind's in the east."

"It was in the north, sir, as we came down," observed Richard.

"My dear Rick," said Mr. Jarndyce, poking the fire; "I'll take an oath its either in the east, or going to be. I am always conscious of an uncomfortable sensation now and then when the wind is blowing in the east."

"Rheumatism, sir?" said Richard.

"I dare say it is, Rick. I believe it is. And so the little Jell—I had my doubts about 'em—are in a—oh Lord yes, it's easterly!" said Mr. Jarndyce.

He had taken two or three undecided turns up and down while uttering these broken sentences, retaining the poker in one hand and rubbing his hair with the other, with a good natured vexation, at once so whim-sical and so lovable, that I am sure we were more delighted with him than we could possibly have expressed in any words. He gave an arm to Ada and an arm to me, and bidding Richard bring a candle, was leading the way out, when he suddenly turned us all back again.

"Those little Jellybys. Couldn't you—didn't you—now, if it had mined sugar-plums, or three-cornered raspberry tarts, or anything of that sort?" said Mr. Jarndyce.

"O cousin—!" Ada hastily began.

"Good, my pretty pet. I like cousin. Cousin John, perhaps is better."

"Then, cousin John!—" Ada laughingly began again.

"Ha, ha! Very good, indeed," said Mr. Jarndyce, with great enjoyment. "Sounds uncommonly natural. Yes, my dear?"

"It did better than that. It rained Esther."

"Ay?" said Mr. Jarndyce. "What did Esther do?"

"Why, cousin John," said Ada, clasping her hands upon his arm, and shaking her head at me across him—for I wanted her to be quiet: "Esther was their friend directly. Esther nursed them to sleep, washed and dressed them, told them stories, bought them keepsakes,"—My dear girl! I had only gone out with Peepy, after he was found, and given him a little tiny horse!—"and, cousin John, she softened poor Caroline, the eldest one, so much, and was so thoughtful for me, and so amiable!—No, no, I won't be contradicted, Esther dear! You know, you know, it's true!"

The warm-hearted darling leaned across her cousin John, and kissed me; and then, looking up in his face, boldly said, "At all events, cousin John, I will thank you for the companion you have given me." I felt as if she challenged him to run away. But he didn't.

"Where did you say the wind was, Rick?" asked Mr. Jarndyce.

"In the north, as we came down, sir."

"You are. There's no east in it. A mistake of mine. Come, girls, come and see your home!"

It was one of those delightfully irregular houses, where you go up and down steps out of one room into another, and where you come upon more rooms when you think you have seen all there are, and where there is a bountiful provision of little halls and passages, and where you find still older cottage rooms in unexpected places, with lattice-windows and green growth pressing through them. Mine, which we entered first, was of this kind, with an up-and-down roof, that had more corners in it than I ever counted afterward, and a chimney (there was a wood-fire on the hearth,) paved all round with pure white tiles, in every one of which a bright miniature of the fire was blazing. Out of this room you went down two steps, into a charming little sitting-room, looking down upon a flower-garden, which room was henceforth to belong to Ada and me. Out of this you went up three steps, into Ada's bedroom, which had a fine broad window, commanding a beautiful view (we saw a great expanse of darkness lying underneath the stars), to which there was a hollow window-seat, in which, with a spring-lock, three dear Adas might have been lost at once. Out of this room, you passed into a little gallery, with which the other best rooms (only two) communicated, and so, by a little stair-case of shallow steps, with a great number of corner stairs in it, considering its length, down into the hall. But if, instead of going out at Ada's door, you came back into my room, and went out at the door by which you had entered it, and turned up a few steps that branched off in quite an unexpected manner from the stairs, you led yourself in passages with mangles in them, and three-cornered tables, and a Native-Hindoo chair, which was also a sofa, a box, and a bed-stead, and looked, in every form, something between a bamboo skeleton and a bird-cage, and had been brought from India nobody knew by whom or when. From these, you came on Richard's room, which was part library, part sitting-room, part bed-room, and seemed indeed a comfortable compound of many rooms. Out of that, you went straight, with a little interval of passage, to the plain room where Mr. Jarndyce slept, all the year round, with his window open, his bed-stead without any furniture, standing in the middle of the floor for more air, and his cold bath gaping for him in a smaller room adjoining. Out of that, you came into another passage, where there were back stairs, and where you could hear the horses being rubbed down, and being told to Hold up, and Get over, as they slipped about very much on the uneven stones. Or you might, if you came out at another door, (every room had at least two doors) go straight down to the hall again by half-a-dozen steps and a low arch-way, wondering how you got back there, or had ever got out of it.

The furniture, old-fashioned rather than old, like the house, was as pleasantly irregular. Ada's sleeping-room was all flowers—in chintz and paper, in velvet, in needle work, in the brocade of two stiff country chairs, which stood, each attended by a little page of a stool for greater state, on either side of the fireplace. Our sitting-room was green; and had, framed and glazed, upon the walls, numbers of surprising and surprised birds, staring out of pictures at real trout in a case as brown and shining as if it had been served with gravy; and at the death of Captain Cook; and at the whole process of preparing tea in China, as depicted by Chinese artists.

In my room there were oval engravings of the months—ladies lay-making, in short waists, and large hats tied under the chin, for June—smooth-legged noblemen, pointing, with cocked hats, to village steeples for October. Half-length portraits, in canyons, abounded all through the house; but were so dispersed that I found the brother of a youthful officer of mine in the china-closet, and the gray old age of my pretty young bride, with a flower in her bodice, in the breakfast room. As substitutes, I had four angels, of Queen Anne's reign, taking a complacent gentleman to heaven, in festoons, with some difficulty; and a composition in needle-work, representing fruit, a kettle, and alphabet. All the moveables, from the wardrobe's to the chairs and tables, hangings, glasses, even the pincushions, and scent-bottles on the dressing tables, displayed the same quaint variety. They agreed in nothing but their perfect neatness, their display of whitest linen, and their storing-up, wheresoever the existence of a drawer, small or large, rendered it possible, of quantities of rose-leaves and sweet lavender. Such, with its illuminated window, softened here and there by shadows of curtains, shining out upon the starlight night; with its light and warmth, and comfort; with its hospitable jingle, at a distance, of preparations for dinner; with the face of its generous master brightening everything we saw; and just wind enough without to sound a low accompaniment to everything we heard, were our first impressions of Bleak House.

"I am glad you like it," said Mr. Jarndyce, when he had brought us round again to Ada's sitting-room. "It makes no pretentions; but it is a comfortable little place, I hope, and will be more so with such bright young looks in it. You are barely half an hour before dinner. There is no one here but the finest creature upon earth—a child."

"More children, Esther!" said Ada.

"I don't mean literally a child," pursued Mr. Jarndyce; "not a child in years. He is grown up—he is at least as old as I am—but in simplicity, and freshness, and enthusiasm, and a fine guileless inaptitude for all worldly affairs, he is a perfect child."

We felt that he must be very interesting.

"He knows Mrs. Jellyby," said Mr. Jarndyce. "He is a musical man; an Amateur, but might have been a Professional. He is an Artist, too; an Amateur, but might have been a Professional. He is a man of attainments and of captivating manners. He has been unfortunate in his affairs, and unfortunate in his pursuits, and unfortunate in his family; but he don't care—he's a child!"

"Did you imply that he has children of his own, sir?" inquired Richard.

"Yes, Rick! Half-a-dozen. More! Nearer a dozen, I should think. But he has never looked after them. How could he? He wanted somebody to look after him. He is a child, you know!" said Mr. Jarndyce.

And have the children looked after themselves at all, sir?" inquired Richard.

"Why, just as you may suppose," said Mr. Jarndyce: his countenance suddenly falling. "It is said that the children for the very poor are not brought up, but dragged up some how or other—The wind's getting round again, I am afraid. I feel it rather!"

Richard observed that the situation was exposed on a sharp night.

"It is exposed," said Mr. Jarndyce. "No doubt that's the cause. Bleak House has an exposed count. But you are coming my way. Come along."

Our luggage having arrived, and being all at hand, I was dressed in a few minutes, and engaged in putting my wordly goods away, when a maid (not the one in attendance upon Ada, but another whom I had not seen) brought a basket into my room, with two bunches of keys in it, all labeled.

"For you miss, if you please," she said.

"For me?" said I.

"The housekeeping keys, miss!"

I showed my surprise; for she added, with some little surprise on her own part; "I was told to bring them as soon as you was alone, miss. Miss Summerson, if I don't decieve myself?"

"Yes," said I. "That is my name."

"The largo bunch is the housekeeping, and the little bunch is the cellars, miss. Any time you was pleased to appoint to-morrow morning, I was to show you the presses and things they belong to."

I said I would be ready at half-past six; and after she was gone, stood looking at the basket, quite lost at the magnitude of my trust. Ada found me thus; and had such a delightful confidence in me when I showed her the keys, and told her about them, that it would have been insensibility and ingratitude not to feel encouraged. I know, to be sure, that it was the dear girl's kindness; but I liked to be so pleasantly cheated.

When we went down stairs, we were presented to Mr. Skimpole, who was standing at the fire telling Richard how fond he used to be, in his school-time, of foot-ball. He was a little bright creature with a rather large head; but a delicate face, and a sweet voice, and there was a perfect charm in him. All he said was so free from effort and spontaneous, and was said with such captivating gaiety, that it was fascinating to hear him talk. Being of a more slender figure than Mr. Jarndyce, and having a richer complexion, with browner hair, he looked younger. Indeed, he had more the appearance in all respects, of a damaged young man, than a well-preserved elderly one. There was an easy negligence in his manner, even in his dress (his hair carelessly disposed, and his neckkerchief loose and flowing, as I have seen artists paint their own portraits), which I could not separate from the idea of a romantic youth who had undergone some unique process of depreciation. It struck me as being not at all like the manner or appearance of a man who had advanced in life by the usual road of years, cares, and experiences.

I gathered from the conversation, that Mr. Skimpole had been educated for the medical profession, and had once lived, in his professional capacity, in the household of a German prince.—He told us, however, that as he had always been a mere child in point of weights and measures, and had never known any thing about them (except that they disgusted him), he had never been able to prescribe with the requisite accuracy of detail. In fact, he said, he had no head for detail. And he told us with great humor, that when he wanted to bleed the prince, or physic any of his people, he was generally found lying on his back in bed, reading the newspapers, or making fancy sketches in pencil, and couldn't come. The prince, at last, objecting to this, "in which," said Mr. Skimpole, in the frankest manner, "he was perfectly right," the engagement terminated; and Mr. Skimpole having (as he added with delightful gayety) "nothing to live upon but love, fell in love, and married, and surrounded himself with rosy cheeks." His good friend Jarndyce and some other of his good friends then helped him, in quicker or slower succession, to several openings in life, but to no purpose, for he must confess to two of the oddest infirmities in the world, one was, that he had no idea of time; the other, that he had no idea of money. In consequence which he never kept an appointment, never could transact any business, and never knew the value of any thing! Well! So he had got on in life, and here he was! He was very fond of reading the papers, very fond of making fancy-sketches with a pencil, very fond of nature, very fond of art. All he asked of society was, to let him live. That wasn't much. His wants were few. Give him the papers, conversation, music, mutton, coffee, landscape, fruit in the season, a few sheets of Bristol-board, and a little claret, and he asked no more. He was a mere child in the world, but he did not cry for the moon. He said to the world "Go your several ways in peace! Wear red coats, blue coats, lawn sleeves, put pens behind your ears, wear aprons; go after glory, holiness, commerce, trade, any object you prefer;—only let Harold Skimpole live!"

RUFUS KING & CO.

FROM OUR N. YORK CORRESPONDENT.

NEW YORK, April 27, '52.

It must sadly puzzle foreigners, seeking an insight into our party movements and contests, to understand, or account for, the strange names under which different parties, or different portions of the same pass from time to time. There have been very many party designations in our country since the adoption of the constitution, and none of them have lasted long, or always expressed the same idea. The first division, after that of Whigs and Tories during the War of Independence, arose from the conflicting views about the Constitution of the U. S., and were significant of a fact. Federalists and Anti-Federalists told plainly enough that the former were in favor of the new federal Union under the new Constitution, and the latter opposed to it. But, as the Constitution gained friends and became popular by the benefits it was daily securing and augmenting for the whole country, the term anti-federalist was dropped by those whom really it characterized—and they assumed, impudently enough, the name of "Republicans"—and parties under Washington's Administration and that of the first Adams, were classed as federalists and republicans—But the latter term was more easily understood than the former—it looked, or seemed to look, more decidedly popular—and those who, without any just claim, had arrogated it to themselves, lost no opportunity of deluding the people into the belief that the name necessarily implied the thing—and that they who called themselves republicans were so in fact, and were so alone—while their opponents were stigmatized as the lovers and upholders of a powerful central government, of institutions antagonistic of republican simplicity and equality. In this way two objects were accomplished—the decrying of an antagonist party—and the indulgence of the old grudge of anti-federalism, still rankling in the republican party against the constitution, which had committed the sin, unpardonable in the eyes of little great men, of teaching them their own insignificance, and that Country comprised the whole, and not a little State faction, of our republic.

But as the influence and tenets of the French Revolutionary orgies of '92 and onward, gained ground among our people—the word "democracy" came into play—and although Mr. Jefferson and his friends in Virginia abstained carefully, at first, from calling themselves "democrats," and retained the name of the Republican party till after Mr. Jefferson became President, they felt all the advantage in our really free northern and other states, of claiming the name of democrats and appealing to democracy, though abstaining from any such appeals at home.

By degrees, however, Federalists and Democrats came to be the designation of parties, and that continued up to the war of 1812, notwithstanding the fact that all the distinctive federal measures of government had been adopted and even carried to an exaggerated extent in several instances by the democrats in power.

Next came Federal Republicans and Democrats, and then National Republicans, till latterly Whigs and Loco Focos were the distinguishing rallying cries. These again have undergone changes—of Democratic Whigs—and the Loco Focos are split into Hunkers and Barnburners. These latter are now giving place to a yet fresher split, with something more of explanation at least in its nomenclature, for Hunkers and Barnburners really explain nothing—but "Old Fogies" and "Young America" seem to have some meaning—yet it would sadly puzzle the most ingenious political Œdipus accurately to define that meaning. "Old Fogyism," indeed, as applied to such old stagers as Cass, Buchanan, and the like, seems plain enough—as does "Young America" applied to Douglass—alike young in years and in knowledge in regard to the high office of President to which he aspires. But these terms are by no means thus circumscribed in their use, whatever they may be in their origin. "Young America" seems to be the expression for every sort of wild vagary, untried theory, or lawless aspiration that demands public audience. It is aggressive, unprincipled, seeking its own gratification at any expense of country or of good faith—and is the complement and carrying out, under another name, of the "manifest destiny" doctrine.

"Old Fogyism," on the other hand, stands often for a blind and indiscriminate adherence to the worship of the past—mainly because it is the past—and aims to keep in the same hands the monopoly of political power and profitable office, which, by skilfully tickling the people, it has so long manage to retain and enjoy.

Between these, and to triumph over them, stands the great Whig party—true to Country and to Duty—not unmindful of the wisdom of the past—not afraid of present progress—not afraid to trust to an expanding future. The Whig party has, indeed, as all parties have, its speculators and traders in politics; and the partial distinction recently attempted in the Washington Caucus, by the bullying of some few Southern members—in order to drive that great party in to the adoption of Fillmore as their candidate for the Presidency, or even Webster—is an illustration of this truth.

But it is all in vain. WINFIELD SCOTT will be the candidate of the Whig party—and will be elected in spite of Whig traders, or Loco Foro opponents. He has the confidence and the hearts of the people. The North—the East—the Centre—and the West—will be all but unanimous for him; and if Southern leaders shall insist upon alienating the South from him, and shall decree that the contest shall be absolutely sectional—Scott will still be elected, and then upon whom will fall the consequences of such a sectional issue? But I do not believe the party leaders in the South can carry their people with them; and look with confidence for the votes of two Southern and Southwestern States at least, and think it not improbable.

Financial Wisdom.

There is no use in any further search for the proper person to fill the office of Comptroller.—There will be no need of establishing Banking institutions elsewhere than at Madison; for so long as the Madison Democrat lives there, there will be found all the financial ability requisite for the wants of the state. It may be well that some portion of the time of its conductor must be occupied with personal abuse of contemporaries, authorities, and all else who may not appreciate their superhuman ability; if it were not so, all other financiers, Robert J. Walker perhaps excepted, might as well close their doors. Such an array of di-counts, depreciations, percentages, currencys, nett differences, bank bills, New York capitalists, &c., &c., as appear in the last number of that paper, in support of its charges against the Governor, are frightful to contemplate. Draw the veil carefully, and look at the array:

The difference between 6 per cents at 5 cent premium, and 8 per cents at 2c discount on $500,000, 7 per cent difference in sales, and 2 per cent, for five years, making nett difference 17 per cent. —$85,500: interest on $35,000 one month, (and how much longer, nobody knows) at 8 per cent. $233 33 discount on depreciated bank bills, 1½ per cent. $750 00. Total $9,183 33.

A Daniel come to judgment! A Nicholas Biddle raised from the grave! Shades of Croesus, Lucullus, Shylock, and Louis Phillipe—great financiers in your time—defend and preserve us!

WHITEWATER.

This fine village, situated some fifty miles inland from Milwaukee, in the heart of one of the finest Agricultural regions of our state, has taken a new start under the invigorating influence of the Rail Road to the Mississippi. This road passes directly through Whitewater, and will be finished to that point in time to have a grand Fourth of July celebration there the coming summer. The village is tastefully laid out and well-built; boasts of three churches, Congregational, Methodist and Baptist, and a fourth, Catholic in process of construction; has two good Hotels; an available Water-power with a Flouring Mill in operation; excellent Schools and a Female Academy, just chartered; with a full proportion of Dry Goods stores, Doctors and Lawyers, but very little for the two last-named classes to do.

Plank Roads, leading North and South from Whitewater, (for which charters were obtained at the last session of the Legislature) will, with the Rail Road, make this village the nucleus of a very large country business, and the depot for considerable amounts of merchandize and produce. After next July Whitewater will be within two or two-and-a-half hours' ride of Milwaukee, and a more delightful country residence than the village and its vicinity afford, cannot easily be found in our State. Property in that neighborhood is sensibly appreciating, and Messrs. CHAPMAN & LIDDINGTON of this city, who have bought and laid out an "Addition" to Whitewater, find a quick sale and frequent customers for their lots.

☞ Will the Milwaukee Wisconsin and Commercial please send us their daily? The Sentinel has "cut our acquaintance."—Green Bay Spectator.

With great pleasure, and at the same time we take occasion to say that one way of showing "spirit" is to cut off an exchange by way of revenge.—Commercial.

Possibly it may be, but it is a "way" which the Sentinel at least does not follow. We have no "revenge" to gratify against our Green Bay contemporary, and never dreamed of cutting its acquaintance. Of course, our amiable neighbors of the Commercial will take as much pleasure in correcting their statement, as they felt in publishing it. It is significent to remark, by the way, that both the Commercial and the Spectator thought it all right for our subscribers at Green Bay to show their "spirit" by cutting our acquaintance, but are very much shocked as the base suggestion of the Sentinel's "following copy."

☞ The McDonough case was under trial before the U. S. Circuit Court at our last dates from New Orleans. It was whispered about that a new feature would soon be brought out in the case. It is thus adverted to by the Delta:

It is said that when the plaintiffs in this action, who are the collateral relatives of the deceased, succeed in breaking the will, the widow and children will come in and relieve them of their burden. For, says rumor, the testator was duly and legally married, and lived seven years with his wife in New Orleans, from which resulted two children. It is further said that McDonough gave them some fifty thousand dollars, before his death, though no mention is made of them in his will. Verily, the "glorious uncertainties" of the legal element are to be considerable realized in this case.

The Prospect.

A flattering prospect the Whigs have before them, in the nomination of Scott, very.—Commercial.

Many a truth is spoken in jest. The above is one of them. General Scott is bound to win the field.

☞ The Commercial backs and fills at a wonderful rate in its articles concerning the State loan. In its issue of yesterday, it insists that it made no charge of delay upon the Governor!—That paper is also in great distress lest we shall "make out its case." Don't be alarmed, neighbor! It is too bad a case for us to attempt to improve. We did venture to approve of a seeming return to fair dealing on your part, but you dashed our hopes by turning into evil courses again the next day.

PAYING FOREIGN TRIBUTE.—A writer in the Richmond Whig states that Virginia has now in progress of construction 800 miles of railroad, requiring 80,000 tons of rails to lay it. At the present price of English iron, say $40 per ton, these rails will cost $3,200,000, which must be paid by the people of Virginia to the English manufacturers. And a very respectable debt she is running up in these expenditures for the benefit of foreign iron masters.

THE TIDE OF TRAVEL.—We learn from Capt. Cotton, Agent of the Michigan Central R. R. Line, that the train West from Detroit on Monday last brought 370 through passengers to New Buffalo, and the Arctic, which left New Buffalo that night, had 750 passengers for the different ports on this Lake.

DAILY FOREST CITY.—We have received the first two or three numbers of an exceedingly neat little Daily, published under this title in the thriving and beautiful City of Cleveland. The editor and proprietor is J. MEDILL, and judging from the samples sent us the "Forest City" cannot fail to become a favoite newspaper at home as well as abroad.

JEALOUS!—The Wisconsin is quite put out at our speaking of the Free Democrat as the organ of the "Black Swan" Club. We should have said one of the organs. The Wisconsin is the other; its editor being the President of the Club and a warm admirer of the Sable Swan, worshipping even her miniature.

NO FOREIGN NEWS.—Our Telegraph Report last night brings no confirmation of the rumor of a foreign arrival and an advance in produce. The New York Market is firm, but without materia change.

An officer named Ridgley, and another named Snyder, the latter from Harrisburgh, arrested a negro named Smith this morning, and while in their custody he was shot, whether, by accident or design we cannot say. There is great excitement here about it, Smith was supposed to be a slave, though living here a number of years. A number of blacks were present when it happend.

ORATORIO OF THE SEASONS.—This grand composition was admirably performed by the Milwaukee Musical Society on Tuesday night. The Orchestra was excellent, the choruses well-drilled and effective, and the solo parts, especially the tenor and soprano, very cleverly sung. The whole performance was in the highest degree creditable to the Society and to the accomplished and indefatigable conductor, Mr. Bilatka. We are glad to see that at the Concert for Members to-morrow evening, the Society will repeat two parts, Summer and Autumn, of the Seasons. Let those who missed the opportunity to hear the whole on Tuesday make sure of the chance of hearing the two best parts to-morrow.

A Card.

At a meeting of "Rough & Ready" Engine Company No. 1, held at their Engine House, on Tuesday evening, May 4th, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the thanks of this Company is due to JOHN M. LOOMIS, our late Foreman, for the very efficient service he has rendered the Company, while in command, at fires; and for the gentlemanly manner in which he has presided over the deliberations of its meetings.

JAMES DUFFEY, Sec'y.

☞ The Graffenberg medicines, advertised in our paper this morning, are well known in this region of country, and large numbers of our citizens have used them to great advantage. We don't think much, generally, of the system of every man's being his own physician, but there are some of the advertised medicines which have a reputation earned by long use, and gained by their actual virtues. Such should be known and patronized.

ROUGH AND READY No. 4.—MR. JOHN M. LOOMIS, after a year or two of very efficient service, has resigned his post as Foreman of Engine Company No. 4. The Company, at their meeting on Tuesday, made choice of JOHN C. GOODRICH, a zealous Fireman, to fill Mr. Loomis' place, and unanimously adopted a vote of thanks to their late Foreman, which will be found in our columns.

LAWRENCE UNIVERSITY.—This evening at 7½ o'clock, the Rev. DAVID BROOKS, Agent of the Lawrence University, will deliver a lecture on Education, in the M. E. Church, and also explain the plan of endowment of said University by the sale of perpetual scholarships at $50 each.

☞ See the card of DICKINSON, CAMP, & Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, successors to the old firm of Stockley, Dickinson & Co., dealers in Coal, and general Commission Merchants. They refer to well known houses here.

☞ The celebrated magician and ventriloquist, the "TAKIR OF SIVA," who has been performing at Chicago for some days to crowded houses, will open a series of entertainments in this city, in the Theatre, about the 1st of June. So we are informed, by a despatch from his agent.

☞ The Steamer Hendrik Hudson, from Chicago, came in last evening, took on a good lot of passengers and some 600 bbls. of Flour at this port, and left again for Buffalo.

☞ LIVINGSTON, WELLS & Co., the great Express firm, offer by their advertisement, to purchase tickets by the California steamers, and save their customers from fraud. It is an excellent idea.

☞ The Propeller Rossiter is still detained in port for repairs. She will probably leave for Green Bay to-day or to-morrow.

The Gen'l Harrison left for Green Bay yesterday morning.

CALIFORNIA.—In another column will be found the advertisement of Livingston, Wells & Co., New York, which will be of importance to all who contemplate a trip to the Pacific.

☞ Capt. GOLDSMITH, of the Hudson, reports that the Schooner Sam Hale, of this port, was leading the whole fleet of Propellers and Sail Vessels through the Straits.

DRY GOODS.—WALL sells this morning at his Auction Rooms, a large assortment of dry goods, well worth the attention of merchants and housekeepers.

☞ See the advertisement of Messrs. ATKINS & STEELE, who are already in the field with New Goods, and offer a handsome assortment of every thing in their Line.

POLITICAL NOMENCLATURE.—The New York Courier & Enquirer has been getting up a political nomenclature, from which we obtain the following enumeration of "elements" which are to compose the forthcoming "Democratic" National Convention:

"Every shade of the party will be represented. Abolition Disunionists—Abolition Unionists—Higher Law Free-Soilers—Low-Law Free-Soilers—Anti-Fugitive Law, Nullification Men—Anti-Fugitive Law, Anti-Nullification, Continued-Agitation Men—Anti-Fugitive Law, Anti-Nullification, Anti-Continued Agitation, Finality Men—Anti-Fugitive Law, Anti-Nullification, Anti-Continued Agitation, Anti-Finality Men—Compromise Men proper, on principle and con amore—Compromise State Rights Men—Anti-Compromise State Rights Men—Constitutional Rights' Men—Anti-Compromise Southern Rights' Men—Anti-Compromise, Nashville Convention Men—Anti-Compromise, Anti-Nashville Convention Men, State Rights, Right-of-Secession Men, Right of Secession, Anti-Secessionists—and right of Secession outright Secessionists—Secessionists by State cooperation, Secessionists by separate State action, and Secessionists-any-how-you-can-fix-it—Old Federalists and Young Democrats, and Young Federalists and Old Democrats—Old Fogies and Young Fogies, Hunkers and Barnburners—Tariff of 1846 Men, Tariff of 1842 Men, Revenue Tariff Men, No Tariff Men and Free Traders—Internal Improvement and Anti-Internal Improvement Men—Strict Constructionists and Loose Constructionists, Internal Improvements and Non-Intervencionists, Conservatives and Radicals, Cass Men, Buchanan Men, Douglass Men, Houston Men, Marcy Men, Butler Men, Stockton Men, Cobb Men, Hunter Men and Gadsden Men. These and scores of nondescripts that baffle all classification."

THE CALF CASE DECIDED.—The papers East have made the city of Burlington the originating point of this famous law suit. A mistake entirely. The case arose in West Point, Lee county, a thriving village on the route of the Dubuque and Keokuk railroad; and was commenced about a year ago by an action of replevin before a justice of the peace of that place. The difficulty was to identify the calf claimed. The witnesses of one party, some 20 or 30 in number, swore that the calf was entirely black, and those of the other party, about equal in number, swore that it was partly white. The jury returned a verdict from which an appeal was taken to the District Court of Lee county. The appeal was tried at the last term of that court, but the jury disagreed. The legal costs had then accounted to $300. The case was continued to the present term, and tried again last week at Fort Madison. The jury this time decided in the case, finding for the plaintiff, or that the tail was "partly white." The cost have now reached $500. Upon the final trial, four members of the har were arrayed on the side of the plaintiff and three on the side of defendant. Counsel fees and other expenses are of course to be added to the costs, in estimating the amount expended upon this litigation about a calf worth $3.—Iowa State Gazette.

☞ The Michigan Central Railroad is doing a very heavy business. Over 800 first class passengers went out on the cars this morning, besides a large number of emigrants. The travel, so far this spring, has been immense.—[Detroit Trib. 30th April.

THE RIOT ON THE GLOBE!

The steamer Globe, which left Buffalo for Chicago on Wednesday, April 21st, arrived at our docks on Saturday, May 1st, having been detained by the ice which she encountered opposite Erie, compelling her to return and attempt to make Dunkirk harbor, which she was not able to do.—During all this time she has been lying in the ice, without being able to extricate herself until Friday last. The Globe had upwards of one thousand passengers on board, who were chiefly emigrants. After she became imbedded in the ice, Capt. Pratt found it necessary to reduce the service of the table to two meals per day, which were furnished, and which enabled the stock of provisions to hold out. On Thursday April 29, a body of sleek pasengers, the most of whom were Irishman, with one or two Germans, rose in revolt and attempted to obtain the control of the boat, which the avowed object of securing the provisions, stores, &c., and furnishing themselves more liberally with articles which they wished to obtain, than they had received them from the officers. Having armed themselves, they endeavored to take possession of the kitchen, pantry, and stewards' rooms, but were met and overpowered by the officers and crew of the boat, assisted by the well disposed portion of the passengers; after being brought under subjection, they were placed under hatches, and an efficient guard was posted night and day over the hatches to prevent them from again coming on deck.

During the melee, three persons only were injured and those not dangerously. The most severe wounds were received by the ringleader, who was cut by an axe in the side and back. The boat sustained some damage by the wanton breaking of glass and pannel-work around the staterooms.

Mr. Reed, formerly of this office, who is our informant, speaks favorably of the conduct of Capt. Pratt and the other officers, under the somewhat trying test to which they were subjected.

Both wheels of the Globe were disabled in the ice, and she lost a smoke-stack in the gale of Friday night.—Detroit Advertiser.

THE WORLD'S FAIR

PREMIUM SAFES.

DEPOT,

Green Block, Water St.,

(Between Maiden Lane and Wall Street,)

NEW YORK.

THE SUBSCRIBER PLACED HIS FIRE AND BURGLAR-Proof Iron Safe in competition with the whole world at the great Exhibition in London, for which an impartial jury awarded a medal.

The American Fair, held last fall at Castle Garden, also awarded to him a gold medal for the best Fire-Proof Safe, and he has never failed to obtain the highest premium when his Safes has been put in competition with others for that purpose. Certificates have been received from the following well-known mercantile houses, who have had their books, papers and money preserved in them in safety, even within the last thirty days, (and can, with many others, be seen at my store,) viz: Messrs. Schlesinger & Mautrous, and Messrs. L. Watkins, in the Parker House; Messrs. Fisher & Robinson, and Messrs. John Lockwood & Co., in the great fire corner of Liberty and Nassau Streets, and Messrs. Prentiss, Bowne & Co., Fulton-st.

I am the proprietor of HALL'S PATENT LOCK, which obtained a medal (in the name of Adams & Co., Boston,) at the World's Exhibition, and is considered the best Lock for the price, now in existence, being proof against powder, and the Key is no larger than a coin, and can be made changeable.

I invite all purchasers to a close and careful investigation before purchasing, and decide for themselves, who makes the best Fire, Burglar and Damp-Proof Safes combined.

HAWKINS'

STAVE DRESSING MACHINE.

PATENTED JULY 22, 1851.

THIS machine is now in successful operation at the shop of Wm. Hawkins in this city, and will dress Staves for

Packing, Fruit and Whiskey BARRELS, and PIPES or HOGSHEADS, at the rate of 600 Whiskey or 800 Flour Barrel Staves

straight, winding or crooked. In fact, any stave that can be worked by hand will be dressed by this machine, either for tight or slack work, from 22 inches to 72 inches in length of any reasonable width, and to any requisite bilge, and in the most perfect manner. The stave passes through the machine a single time, is dressed by rotary cutters, and is then ready for the truss hoops. The dressing of the sides and jointing of the edges is performed by circular cutters. The machine is made of iron, is strong and durable, and is not difficult to keep in good order for use. Six horse power is sufficient to drive the machine with all the speed necessary.

The Subscribers having purchased of Wm. Hawkins the patent right for the United States as regards Counties, and for States, Counties, or for running single machines and to furnish, and set up the machines, warranted to perform perfectly. In the great saving of expense of transportation of dressed over the rough stave, in rapidity, and perfect manner with which it performs its work, consists the value of this machine.

Satisfactory testimonials can be furnished if desired.
